Dear Jeff:

Your warm and thoughtful letter I have received. I treasure the spirit of your brotherhood and your friendship, and I count the memories that we share as gems of oft-remembered recollection in my reserve gallery of truth, beauty and goodness.

It is true that the seasons of my life are changing. Pray that I will generously sift the past for its harvest of meaning and value, and that I will be found faithful in the future.

For now I continue with the work at hand, but next year will probably bring a change. I'll keep you informed. Perhaps I'll see you at the Monterrey Conference. I look forward to hearing of your goals and plans.

I shall always be glad that we shared this life together, and for that spring semester at Western Kentucky University long ago when you "just happened to have an extra copy" of The URANTIA Book (which I still have).

Yours,

Charles
